

Better Citizen Questions

Deliberative Poll Specific Questions

Why did you decide to participate in the Poll?

Most important of the reasons given you gave in the previous question.

To what extend did you read the material?

Evaluation of the material

- A) Too comphrehensive
- B) Too superficial
- C) Got new knowledge
- D) Missed examples
- E) Politically unbalanced
- F) Exciting
- G) Difficult language
- H) It did not say anything I did not already knew

Was the information balanced?

Did you change your opinion between recruitment and now in relation to the euro-question?

What was your most important issue in relation to your opinion to the Euro?

How did you find the debate (in the news) on the euro lately?

Did you learn any thing?

What parts of the poll had most influence on your opinion formation?

- a) information material
- b) group discussions
- c) plenary session with experts
- d) plenary session with Euro parliaments' members
- e) plenary session with MP's
- f) plenary session with top-politicians
- g) discussion with non-group members

Difference "deliberative democratic" arguments related to the process

The level of information was high during the Poll

Being part of the Poll has increased my understanding of the euro-question

The Poll added not much to my knowledge on the euro-issue

Participating the poll has increased my understanding of yes-argument as well as no-arguments

There was a pressure toward the participants to change view in a certain direction

Participating in the Poll has caused that my opinion to be more nuanced/differentiated/balanced

Balanced debates?

Evaluation of the debates during the poll

The size of the plenary sessions did not allow proper answers to the questions

The form of asking questions to the politicians and expert was good

I would have preferred speeches from experts and politicians and rather than I had to ask question

The chair of the groups help everybody to speak up

The TV-stations presence was a conflicting element during the plenary debates

difference "deliberative democratic" arguments related to the process:

The discussions were superficial

The discussion was specific

There was a positive atmosphere within the group

From the beginning there was consensus in the group

Towards the end there was consensus in the group

There was consensus in the group on the way to deliberate

A few of the participants dominated the discussions

the discussion was "lively" from the beginning

The discussion was "lively" toward the end

The discussion dominated by insecurity on factual details

The discussions were characterized by responsiveness towards each others' arguments

Alliances between some of the participants arose

An understanding for the arguments opposing my own arguments was created

It was difficult to agree on the questions to be asked in the plenary sessions

The discussion in the group was more relation to EU in general than the euro

There was too little time to discuss

The large size of group made it difficult to speak up

Difference "deliberative democratic" arguments related to the process

The participants in the group argued by referring to what would be best for themselves

The participants in the group argued for a case by referring to justice and general principles

The participants in the group argued by warning against negative consequences of a yes or no to the single currency

The participants in the group argued by referring to what would be best and most fair for all citizens

All positions in the group were considered with equal respect

All aspects of the euro-debate were covered in the group discussions

The arguments of the other participants were useful in forming my own position

Evaluation of "group-leader"

The chair of the group informed clearly on the purpose and the intensions with the group discussion

The chair of the group help every one to speak up

The chair of the group tried to effect the discussion with his own opinion

The chair of the group favoured certain opinion

The chair of the group helped the group to analyxe the euro-questions from different perspectives

The chair of the group help to a positive atmosphere in the group

The chair of the group help the participants to get their opinion forward

The chair of the group was to passive

Did you change your opinion compared to yesterday

most important issue related to the opinion formation

Willingness to argue in public for your views participate in future Polls

will you recommend your environment to participate in future polls

Poll link to representative democracy

Deliberative Polls should not be used describe with own words your experience at the poll